

Han, author and former entrepreneur, seeks the wisdom of 100 outstanding leaders to influence young people in their twenties and thirties who are searching for their path to a successful career. During extensive interviews with CEOs, writers, artists, and entertainers, Han developed information on their experiences in early adulthood as they learned about themselves and how they translated that knowledge into winning stature in their chosen profession. With self-knowledge as the core ingredient, we learn about other requirements such as intelligence and hard work, integrity, flexibility, discipline, effective communication skills, drive, and some luck. The CEO of Tower Automotive noted that the best people in business are those who make mistakes, learn from them, fix the important ones, and keep moving on. She counsels, "That's resilience." This small book offers excellent insight for library patrons who are looking for their first jobs after college or graduate school and are trying to find what they are meant to do.

-Mary Whaley

Copyright © American Library Association. All rights reserved